

small, freckled, red-haired and almost concealed behind an apron. But you knew it was Betsy Ross because the program said so.

Presently there stalked in no less a person than General Washington.

"Betsy," he said, "what do you think? We ain't got no flag."

"Ain't got no flag!" cried Betsy.

"Ain't got no flag," solemnly echoed the general.

"Ain't—got—no—flag," repeated Betsy once more. "Well, ain't that fierce! General, you sit down and make yourself at home and soon as I get these dishes done I'll fix you up something or bust!"

Curtain.

The final act was a tableau, showing the entire cast, with General Washington proudly holding the flag.

—o—o—

* GIRLS, DO YOU USE *
* "UNDRESSED" ENG- *
* LISH? *

Oh, Fudge! Piffle! No more dewdabs for Wellesley students.

There's a great agitation at Wellesley college against slang, which the girls call "undressed English." Each girl who is heard to use slang must pay a fine into the Government Building fund.

Slang at Wellesley is expressive if not elegant. Here are some of the stock phrases:

Believe Me—Always accented on the "lieve."

Caleb—A woman or girl you admire and respect for her achievements.

Crush—A thing a senior may fall back upon when she is out of town.

Cuts Chunks—Cuts great chunks of ice.

Dewdabs—Masculine kisses.

Dumps—The misery that doesn't love company.

El—Staircases.

Freaks—Persons one doesn't like.

Fudge, Piffle—Purely exclamatory.

Gym—Good for pronated ankles.

Infant Child—Spoken always in an endearing tone.

Jam—A flurry.

Lah-di-dah—Dressed up.

Peach—Form of admiration, applicable to anything from a Harvard freshman to a new spring hat.

Peanut—Persons who are not square.

Perfectly Sweet and Perfectly Awful—Used literally but frequently.

Pill—Same as peanut.

Quiz—An ordeal arranged by the faculty.

Rig—Costume.

Scream—Anything that is comical.

Shaggy—Mystery; used frequently.

Shark—A person you secretly envy and publicly malign for her achievements.

Swell—Perfectly glorious.

V. L.'s—Persons you like; derived from violent likes.